

Wednesday, September 22nd

Well, now I've gone and done it. Remember how I said yesterday that while you're waiting for Mom to hand down her punishment you end up doing all this good stuff to make her change her mind? It was that kind of thinking that got me in this extra trouble I'm in now.

Today after school I thought maybe if I washed Mom's car before she got home, she might go easy on me with the punishment thing. So that's what I did, but I made the mistake of using Brillo to rub off all the bugs and tar spots. So I was in for the surprise of my life when I rinsed the car off.

Dear Diary,

Today I went for a lovely swim in the cool Pacific Ocean. Jonah took care of me in Room 17. I met my friends, Otto and Edick, who are also otters, but much bigger.

Bye for now,
Eddie

Dear Diary,

Here I was lucky me at the local swimming pool almost about to walk up the stairs to the diving board. At that moment it didn't seem that scary but it was. I went up the stairs a bit nervous; however, when it came to the top it all changed. It was quite high at the top therefore before you could even start a little kid who could do it came up and I told her she was just a little kid and she didn't understand.

I walked slowly to the end of the diving board. Cautiously I stopped at the end. It was when I saw Holly but oh no I went flying. When I looked up again the little kid had my swimming TRUNKS!!! I was mortified.

This day could not get any worse but oh it did. Holly swam over and asked me if I wanted to go for ice cream but I couldn't I was devastated. Really, this had to happen. Yep you guess it Patty was here and she had goggles. This wasn't good!!! I swam and swam this can't get any worse.
